Soviet Is Seeking Better Trade Ties, U.S. Report Says

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet

Union has indicated a "strong interest" in expanding trade with the United States and has agreed to take several steps, such as an end to discrimination against U.S. compa-nies, to improve the relationship.

A U.S. government report on trade talks with the Russians in Moscow on Jan. 8-9 also says that the Americans "made it plain at the outset of the meetings that our security and foreign policy interests remain paramount and will continne to set limits to acceptable

Tass Says U.S. Has Darkened Mood for New Geneva Talks

By William J. Eaton Los Angeles Times Service

MOSCOW — The Tass news agency has accused the United States of "darkening the atmosphere" for new Geneva talks on arms control by falsely accusing the Soviet Union of breaking existing

In a dispatch on Saturday, Tass assailed a Reagan administration report that was sent to Congress on Friday. The report said it had consian violation of an anti-ballistic missile agreement and reiterated charges of other violations.

Tass labeled the report a "crudely manufactured falsehood." It accused the Pentagon of trying to scuttle the 1972 treaty limiting anti-ballistic missile defense systems so that it can go ahead with a "crash militarization" of space.

issuing the falsehood, Washington obviously pursues the aim of darkthe Soviet-American talks in Geneva next March," Tass said.

scheduled to meet March 12 in Geneva to discuss controls on strategic and intermediate-range missiles and on space-based weapons and defense systems. In his message transmitting the report to Congress, President Ron-ald Reagan said that Soviet "noncompliance" with past agreements "undermines the confidence essential to an effective arms control process in the future." Tass did not offer evidence in rebuttal of any specific charge, but it declared: "The United States does not have any facts to back up the accusations, and it cannot be otherwise since such facts simply do not exist."

The Reagan report says that it has found evidence to confirm its assertions that the Russians have been developing and testing a variety of new anti-ballistic missile equipment, in violation of the ABM treaty.

The report also repeats charges that the Russians have violated or "possibly violated" various agreements by using chemical and toxic weapons, deploying the mobile SS-16 missile, testing a second landbased intercontinental missile, using equipment associated with ABMs and not giving the West prior notification of large-scale maneuvers in Eastern Europe.

 U.S. Declines Comment The State Department said Saturday that it had no comment on the Soviet press denials of the U.S. charges, Renters reported from Washington. The report says that one Soviet official, Vladimir S. Alkhimov, chairman of the State Bank, hinted unofficially that Jewish emigration might be stepped up if relations improved

The renewed interest in Soviet-U.S. trade coincides with an agreement between the two countries to resume arms-control negotiations next month. U.S. officials say there is an implicit link between the trade and the disarmament talks.

The report, a copy of which was obtained from a government offi-cial, is classified secret. It was presented last week at a government meeting on international economic policy by Lionel H. Olmer, undersecretary of commerce, who led the U.S. delegation to Moscow.
In the first trade discussions with Moscow since 1978, the Americans met with a Soviet delegation led by a deputy minister of foreign trade, Vladimir N. Sushkov.

The U.S. report, in speaking about the unofficial comment about Jewish emigration prospects by the chairman of the State Bank, said: "Chairman Alkhimov, in particular, said that if good relations were restored with the United States, 50,000 Jewish emigres annually would be 'no problem."

After reaching a high point of nearly 50,000 a year in the 1970s. fewer than 900 Jews were permitted to emigrate last year. There are 1.8 million Jews in the Soviet Union out of a total population of 276

U.S. officials were uncertain how to interpret the remark about the prospects of Jewish emigration. On the one hand, it was taken as an indication of a desire for trade priv-Vanik amendment to the 1974 Trade Act. That amendment bars tariff reductions on goods being imported into the United States from countries that restrict emigra-

U.S. Food Aid Is Free, But the Costs Are High

By Seth S. King

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — Each week, officials of the Agriculture Department and the Agency for International Development receive scores of letters from across the United States asking why farm surpluses cannot just be given outright to starving Africans.

The immediate answer, the officials say, is that the surpluses can be. But not simply or cheaply.

As 1985 began, the Agriculture Department was holding more than 24 million metric tons of edible farm commodities, which it had acquired in the last five years as payment on price-support loans to farmers or had bought to support the price of milk. In addition to that food, stored in government-leased warehouses, it is expected that at least 4.5 million tons of wheat and 2.6 million tons of corn will remain in farmers' storage bins next summer, before the 1985 crops are harvested.

The Agency for International Development, which arranges the transfer of famine aid to African countries, estimated last fall that at least three million tons of food would be needed in the next 10 months to prevent widespread starvation in Ethiopia, Chad, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Niger and Sudan.

The federal government said then that the United States should provide half of those three million ions and that other countries that export food, such as those in the European Community and Canada, Australia, Brazil and Argentina, should provide the rest. According to the agency's latest count, the United States has spent $279 million to process and start shipping 682,000 metric tons of food to the eight African countries. By the agency's calculations, $411 million will be needed to acquire and start the other 918,000 million tons on its way by the end of the fiscal year next September.

The administration expects Congress to approve $185 million more for famine aid, which will be needed to buy and ship the rest of the commitment. To provide the remaining 1.5 million tons the Africans need, aid officials said, would cost at least $1 billion.

Agriculture Department officials say a quarter of all the money allocated to famine relief is spent on transportation.

While all the food the Agricul ture Department buys and stores is available for famine aid, little of it is of practical use in Africa. And most of it that is must first be processed by commercial food companies in the United States.

The primitive transportation systems in Ethiopia, Chad and Sudan cannot deliver butter and cheese to famine victims. Dried milk is easier to deliver, but there is so little drinkable water in those countries that milk powder cannot be turned into liquid. Instead, it is sprinkled (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Settlers Block Roads Across West Bank

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches JERUSALEM - Jewish settlers blocked major roads across the West Bank for two hours on Sunday morning to demand tougher government action against Pales-tinian attacks on Jewish motorists.

A day earlier, in the largest such action on the West Bank in months, Israeli soldiers and border guards raided the Dahaisha Palestinian camp near Bethlehem and arrested about 20 residents.

The raid followed a surge of rock-throwing and attacks with Molotov cocktail on vehicles passing near the camp. But Israeli secu-rity sources and camp residents said the raid also grew out of recent clashes within Dahaisha between Palestinian groups cooperating with the Israeli occupation authorities and those who oppose such activity as collaboration.

The Jewish settlers parked cars across major roads shortly after dawn on Sunday, blocking the main arteries between Jerusalem and the Palestinian towns of Nablus and Hebron, Israeli radios said.

In Anabta village west of Nabius two settlers fired shots into the air after Palestinian youths, who were protesting the blockade, threw stones at an Israeli bus, a military source said. No injuries were re-

It was Spain's imminent entry into the commu nity that led to agreement with Britain in Novem-

It gave Spaniards rights to reside, work and buy property in Gibral-tar and it committed Britain to discuss the sovereignty of Gibraltar. Those discussions will begin in Geneva on Tuesday, hours after the frontier gates.

The agreement frightened many of Gibraltar's 25,000 native inhabitants who had voted, 12,138 to 44, in 1967 to remain under British rule.

U.S. Largess Can Be Very Large, As Haiti Is Flooded With Raisins

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti - This impoverished Caribbean nation has been inundated by California raisins, a gift from the U.S. government that, officials here say, was almost too bountiful to be

In late November, a 680-ton (612 metric tons) shipment of U.S surplus raisins arrived at this capital. The result has been that raisins, previously unknown to many of Haiti's 5.5 million people, have become virtually a national staple. There also is evidence that the raisins are becoming a staple on the black market.

The raisins were purchased by the U.S. Department of Agriculture last year as part of federal efforts to help growers after a giant crop in 1984 far outstripped demand in the United States. The Agency for International Development and other U.S. relief organizations in Haiti requested 500 tons of the surplus raisins, asking that they arrive over several months in two or three shipments. An official here explained that when such a "one-time-only" surplus becomes available, foreign offices often request the maximum amount they feel they can distribute.

However, because of fiscal constraints, all the raisins were sent aboard one ship. Officials here still are not sure why the request for 500 tons resulted in 680 tons being shipped.

CULVER CITY, California -As many as 87 American-built helicopters with potential for military use were diverted to North Korea by an international sales represen-tative of Hughes Helicopters Inc., federal investigators have charged.

The helicopters were purchased under the pretense that they would be resold in Japan, Portugal, Spain and Nigeria, according to docu-ments filed Friday in Culver City in connection with the case.

However, an investigation has turned up evidence indicating that the helicopters were routed to North Korea, according to an affidavit by David J. Peters, a special agent with the Office of Export Enforcement, a branch of the Department of Commerce.

If proved, this would represent a major breach in U.S. regulations intended to block export of military or other sensitive materials to unfriendly nations. Sale of American goods to North Korea is a felo-

Salvador Calls Truce for Vaccinations

SAN SALVADOR (UPI) — A truce was called Sunday across Salvador, as health officials began a drive to vaccinate 400,000 children against five diseases, authorities said. Against five diseases, authorities said.

Leftist guerrillas pledged through Roman Catholic Church officials to observe a tacit truce on Sunday for the start of a three-stage vaccination program for children less than 6 years old, officials of the United Nations Children's Fund said. Health Minister Benjamin Valdez said the government would not take an active role in the vaccinations and would not initiate fighting.

Despite those pledges, Agop Kayayin, regional UNICEF director, said no attempt would be made to reach more than 20 towns in rebel-controlled mountains near the Honduran border. Children elsewhere were to be innoculated Sunday, March 3 and April 21 against diptheria, tetanus, whooping cough, measies and polio. Dr. Ramón Alvarez, regional director of the Pan American Health Organization, said these diseases contributed to 60 percent of child deaths in El Salvador.

Indian newspapers said S. Sankaran, who worked in President Zail Singh's press office, made a 20-page "confessional statement" Saturday before the magistrate, P.K. Dham. The decree, published without comment in the Official Bulletin, maintaired special curbs on the press and on public gatherings until May 6 because of what it called a "state of internal convulsion" in Chile. BEIRUT (AP) - Prime Minister Rashid Karami has blamed an unjustified "market fever" for the recent weakness of the Lebanese pound and pledged government efforts to strengthen the currency. Mr. Karami, in a radio broadcast after an eight-hour cabinet meeting, also said that several battalions of Lebanese soldiers were ready and waiting to "move immediately" into southern Lebanon when the Israeli occupation force is withdrawn. He dismissed Israeli warnings of possible sectarian violence in the south. As the cabinet met Saturday, Lebanon's currency fell to a record low of 13.30 to the U.S. dollar. Economists have blamed the sharp drop in the value of the Lebanese pound in recent weeks on Lebanon's deepening recession and the government' inability to restore law and order.

Business Competes In Higher Education

Educational programs run by business and industry have be-come big enough in size and scope to constitute an alterna-tive to traditional colleges and universities, according to a study by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of

Prevention Bites Into Dental Practice

Tooth decay, the most wide-spread illness in the United States after the common cold, is now almost wholly preventable, thanks to fluoride and scalants. This is good news for coming generations, but it is already a mixed blessing for many of the 125,000 dentists in the United States. They often find themselves with fewer patients and, especially in some metropolitan areas, an oversupply of compe-with slogans like "Take the bite out of your dental bill."

Dentists are unlikely to go the way of the blacksmith. Americans spent $20 billion on dental care in 1982. Dental insurance, still growing, covers about 100 million people.

Notes About People

Captain Penny E. Harrington, 42, has been appointed by Mayor Bud Clark as chief of police of Portland, Oregon, the first woman in the United States to lead a big-city police force. Mrs. Harrington, 42, joined the force in 1964. On her way to the top, she filed a sex discrimination complaint against the department that led to changes in salaries, promo-tions and regulations on height. She says she plans to put more officers on foot patrol, "walking and talking" to people.

Short Takes

Slow readers, beware. The Missouri State Legislature is pondering a bill that could mean a prison stretch for people who don't return library books on time. Specifically, borrowers who keep books, maps, records and the like worth more than $150 for more than 60 days past their due date could get up to five years in jail and a $5,000 fine. Dan Bradbury, head of the Kansas City Public Library, says 27,000 books and other materials worth more than $250,000 went unreturned last year, "a quarter of our budget."

Shorter Takes: Americans who have not received their anticipated income tax refunds 10 or more weeks after filing can punch their Social Security numbers into the nearest telephone to find out whether the check is in the mail ... an assortment of nuclear weapons that have reached peak production. For example, $6.2 billion is for building the last 48 of the B-1 bombers, completing a fleet of 100. It calls for production of 48 new MX missiles at a cost of $4 billion. That would be an increase from $2.8 billion in the current budget and would be in addition to 21 missiles Congress agreed to pay for last year, but on the condition they not be deployed without another vote from Congress this spring. The first 21 MXs have been approved for production.

The budget also seeks $624 million for continuing research into a successor to the MX. That weapon is a small, truck-borne missile called Midgetman.

The budget would sharply increase research funding for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the anti-missile defense program that is propulately known as popularly known as "star wars," from $1.3 billion to $3.7 billion.

The Pentagon document did not detail how that money is to be spent. But it said the major emphasis would be on directed energy weapons and advanced surveil-lance and tracking systems to spot enemy missies as they are beginning to be launched.

Further, the budget calls for sharp increases in more immediate space-related programs, including a 30 percent increase, to $262 million, for the U.S. Air Force's antisatellite weapon. It is expected to be tested for the first time this spring, fired at an object in space. The Pentagon informed Congress that it intends to include enough money in the budget to continue its program of developing and producing a new generation of chemical weapons, which Congress ordered interrupted until a study can be completed that spring.

The budget also calls for quadrapled spending, to $531 million, on the much-criticized Sergeant York Division Air Defense Gun, DIVAD, although Mr. Weinberger has suspended that program until more tests resolve questions about its accuracy. its ассыгасу.

And the victims of the 1970s would be wise not to perpetuate a cycle of shortsighted selfishness in which, every decade, victim and exploiter change roles until chaos consumes both. The leaders of the industrial democracies in the 1970s asked OPEC for restraint in the name of a community of long-term economic interests of both oil producers and consumers. These appeals, though ignored, were correct. Now that the shoe is on the other foot, the necessity of basing world order on the reality of interdependence remains.

Of course, the industrial democracies can have no conceivable interest in helping OPEC to stabilize oil prices at artificially high levels. However, it is in their interest to help cushion the global impact of what is bound to be, probably for the rest of the decade, a continuing downward pressure on oil prices.
The facts of the marketplace are simple, even if the consequences are not. In the 1970s, OPEC controlled 75 percent of the world's oil output. In the 1980s, OPEC controls less than 35 percent; its capacity to set prices has diminished accordingly. In the 1970s, the expectation of higher oil prices led to a buildup of inventories, thereby increasing demand. In the 1980s, psychology has worked in the opposite direction: The expectation of lower prices has induced a continued decrease in inventories, thus restricting demand. In the 1970s, the United States lost the capacity to increase production. In the 1980s, OPEC is on the verge of losing the capacity to restrict production. Even when OPEC cut its capacity by 40 per-cent, that proved insufficient to maintain current oil prices.

And foreseeable trends likely will worsen the problem. During

Iran, especially, would not hesitate to impose on a defeated enemy and its impotent neighbors the production cutoff that it accepted for itself in the 1970s. It thereby would achieve unilaterally what it has been urging on OPEC for years: sharply reduced production, greatly increased oil prices and a blackmail position vis-à-vis the industrial de-mocracies. A victory for Iran would be, as well, a political disaster be-> of the most radical version of Islamic anti-Western fundamentalism existing from Southeast Asia to the shores of the Atlantic Ocean. Yet the art of statesmanship resides in a sense of proportion. The Iran of radical rhetoric and virulent anti-Western agitation can be no more immune to the erosion of history than the many regimes that have preceded it in Persia over the millenia. Over time, geographical and historical circumstances transcend the fanaticism of individuals. The rantings of the militants now verning Tehran cannot change the reality that Iran has been invaded mostly from the north and overland rather than from the sea.

Hysterical anti-Western agitation will not shorten Iran's frontier of more than 1,000 miles with the Soviet Union, a border that now is more menacing because of the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. Nor can bloodthirsty dogmatism inate - indeed, it will enhance the danger of revolt by Iran's constituent nationalities in Baluchistan, Kurdistan and Azerbaijan. And the Soviet Union is in an unually favorable position to nurture such a revolt.

Thus, the conventional wisdom, that Soviet and American interests in the Iran-Iraq conflict coincide, is valid only in a very limited sense. The United States' interest is to prevent the collapse of the moderate governments in the Arab world. This requires a restrained, not an impotent, Iran. By contrast, the Soviet Union would greatly benefit if

Paul Lewis of The New York Times reported from Paris: A group of 13 industrialized na-tions and the World Bank pledges $1.1 billion Friday to establish new fund to provide long-term economic assistance to African comtries suffering from famine and economic collapse.

The fund is distinct from the emergency ational concern that little food food supplies that Western counhas been reaching the starving peotries are now sending to faminestricken parts of the continent.

A Pause on Mideast Arms

The Reagan administration's quiet decision to suspend all new arms deliveries to Israel and the moderate Arab states, pending a policy review, is the best thing the United States has done in the area since Camp David. Although specific sales to specific countries have been neld up in the past, no similar area-wide pause in deliveries is on record. No doubt different officials have different purposes in mind in supporting this pause, but if it is handled wisely, it could be a boon.

Israel and Arab states such as Saudi Arabia and Jordan are good friends of the United States. There can be no question of cutting them off or putting their security at new risk The point here is, however, that the United States is arming countries that are in a state of war with each other and that calculate their defense needs in large measure by what Washington ships to the other party. This is a context that cries for American balance and restraint, the more so because perceived weapons needs are cruelly exacerbating Israel's tre-mendous economic crisis and pushing Israelis and Arabs alike into ever more mutually troublesome dependence on Washington. Then there are the Russians, who supply the more radical Arabs, Syria, Libya and Iraq all hostile to Israel and some hostile to Egypt, another close American friend. This is a harder case, since obviously the United States cannot practice unilateral restraint. Even in Israel.

however, voices are heard suggesting that the United States consult with Moscow to regulate the flow of arms. The whole matter of greatpower regional consultation is laden with po-litical booby traps. Yet officials of the two superpowers are to hold a rare meeting on the Mideast next month, while the Washington policy review will still be going on.

If there is one basic and continuing flaw in American policy over time, it is the failure to relate its pursuit of good relations with this or that Middle Eastern country to an overall strategy aimed at stability and peace. No one halfway familiar with the area will underestimate the difficulty of connecting the provision of arms to the pursuit of negotiated settlements. Nor will anyone familiar with the area deny the necessity of seeking such a link.

Something like Mr. Reagan's peace plan of 1982 needs to be revived. The moment is not the best, but then, the moment is never the best. The United States' Arab friends will belp some. Israel has at present a prime minister who believes in compromise with Jordan. The administration's new arms pause may turn out to be just a tactical gesture, meant or used to reduce diplomatic tension for a few months. If that is so, the world will go on, which means, in the Middle East, more tension, uncertainty, expense, suffering and danger — the area's familiar wasting disease.

The Poor Getting Poorer

"Losing Ground," Charles Murray's book at praising social policy in the last 30 years. The Reagan budget on Monday is likely to propose deep reductions in education, child nutrition, and housing assistance, and elimination of programs like the Job Corps, revenue sharing, and urban development grants. Agency officials cite the Murray book as a philosophical base for these proposals, for it concludes that social-welfare programs, far from relieving poverty, increase it and should be stopped.

That proposition may be as deeply flawed as it is startling, unlikely to survive scrutiny. Yet what a paradox if Mr. Murray's argument should fall while budget cuts that it supports survive. If the economy is as healthy as the president says, this is precisely the time when a decent society would try to help poor people.

The popular impression, writes Mr. Murray, is that the attack on poverty began in the early '60s but that real progress came only after President Lyndon B. Johnson started spending real money in 1965. The author contends that poverty actually fell sharply before 1965 and much less so afterward. Then, though social spending kept going up well into the '70s, progress stopped. "The number of people living in poverty stopped declining just as the public-assistance program budgets and the rate of increase in those budgets were highest." Why? Mr. Murray believes the programs themselves have created disincentives to work. "For the first time in American history, it became socially acceptable within poor communities to be unemployed. When working no

This year's budget-cutters' bible seems to be longer provides either income or status, the last reason for working has truly vanished. The man who keeps working is, in fact, a chump."

What to do? Obviously, if social programs - welfare, food stamps, unemployment insurance and so on - do harm, then they should be stopped as Mr. Murray suggests. Mr. Murray's argument, however, is troubled by some big holes. Here is just one: the baby boom. He thinks the increases in unemployment and welfare caseloads among young blacks arose because of work disincentives. When society gives away more money, people stop trying so hard to earn it. But what if there is suddenly a huge increase in the number of vulnerable people in the society? The baby boom that began in 1947 did not consist only of the young orban professional whites now bidding up real estate prices on the Upper West Side of Manhattan. It also included young, urban, and decidedly nonprofessional blacks. There is surely something to Mr. Murray's belief that welfare creates disincentives to work. It is a fragile platform, however, on which to base a call for demolishing the nation's system of social welfare. President Reagan asserts that a million blacks have left the unemployment rolls because of the economic boom. It is precisely now, in these boom years and not in the lean years, that a sensible society would try hardest to help its poor citizens gain ground. The Reagan budget proposing yet more cuts in food, housing and health, sounds like an exercise in losing ground, and interest.

1910: The Days of Leisure Are Gone NEW YORK — "The Passing of the Idle Rich" is the title of a new book from Mr. Frederick Townsend Martin, who is devoting his career to promoting a higher standard of culture and humanity among the upper ten thousand of America, misnamed the "Four Hundred." Mr. Martin tears the veil from the inner sanctum of Fifth Avenue society and reveals the reformation which has overtaken his plutocratic competitors. He describes the idle lives they used to live, when idleness was deemed honorable. Now a new spirit has come over American society which considers idleness a disgrace. Even the richest consciences have awakened and their owners have joined the army of office workers in Wall Street, arriving punctually, although tired from the previous night's dancing.

1935: Soviet Pushes Military Buildup MOSCOW — The man power of the Red Army has increased from 600,000 to 940,000 within the past four years. Its mechanization has been raised in some branches 800 percent. Its border fortifications from east to west are complete. A roar of applause greeted Michael Tuchachevsky, Vice-Commissar for War, when he made this disclosure at the Soviet Congress. Air power has increased 330 percent, with pursuit and bombing airplanes almost twice as fast as before. Light tanks are up 760 percent, medium tanks 792 percent. Sub marines have increased 435 percent. Nevertheless, Tuchachevsky asserted, Soviet military expenditure constitutes only 10 percent of the Soviet budget, while Japan is spending 46 percent of its income and Poland 40 percent for military purposes.

No Sign of Pinochet Easing Grip on Chile

SAN DIEGO — With the return of democracy to Argentina and Uruguay, it would seem almost inarmy is General Pinochet's army, evitable that their neighbor in the Southern Cone, Chile, would follow suit. But Chile remains a country occupied by its own army. Despite a strong democratic tradition, and denochet remains in control and is unwilling to relinquish power. The three countries have much in common, including similar situa-tions that gave rise to military regimes in each. As in Uruguay and Argentina, the coup that estab-lished Chile's military dictatorship was prompted by the threat of the organized left against the existing social order and its economic elites. As in the other countries, the subsequent military regime was not ini-tially a personalistic dictatorship but a corporatist enterprise led by the services' commanding officers.

Economic disaster eventually brought the demise of the military governments in Argentina and Uruguay, but popular discontent apparently has not weakened General Pinochet's tight hold on Chile. The difference lies in the nature of his regime and of the opposition to it.

On the government side there is a unique fit between the leader and the institution that supports him. General Pinochet emerged from the four-man junta as something of a charismatic leader for the armed forces. Although he is neither elo-quent nor tactful, his very bluntness and his determination to "stay the course" has found a receptive ear among his fellow officers. And so for more than 10 years he has been both president and commander in chief, while Uruguay and Argentina have seen a succession of military presidents. The Chilean army is nique in South America for its isolation from civil society and, before 1973, its lack of experience in politics. It consists of professional soldiers, not conscripts, and was trained by German officers who inculcated in its soldiers and officers alike a sense of blind obedience. Before the coup the army had no experience in governing, and when it came to power it behaved very differently from the armies of Argentina and Urugnay. There offi-cers deliberated about political and economic issues and eventually split into factions; in Chile they retained the traditional model of monolithic discipline and subordination to their leader's authority. Today the rather than Chile's army. On the civilian side, mobilization against the dictatorship has been conditioned by the unique character of the threat that brought General spite mass popular protests, the Pinochet to power. That threat was government of General Augusto Pimore serious and more deeply felt than in the other countries. In Argentina the challenge to the privileged classes came from a populist movement, Peronism, which never seriously challenged capitalism or private property; in Uruguay a Marxist-oriented urban guerrilla movement was destroyed by the army a year before the coup, and the only leftist threat remaining was an alliance that scored occasional electoral victories. In Chile, however, an alliance of communists and socialists won the presidency and governed for three years. During that time it proceeded deliberately to undermine capitalism and move toward socialist policies. The experience of those years remains a vivid memory in the minds of the Chilean elite and middle class. Although many oppose the military dictatorship, they find it infinitely preferable to a return to the pre-1973 situation. Efforts of the democratic opposition, spear-headed by the Christian Democratic Party, center on constructing a broad coalition of all sectors and classes for a return to the rule of law. Efforts of the government, in contrast, center on reminding the privileged classes of the pre-coup situation and the possibility of a return to that state of affairs.

In recent months the government's effort has been strongly aided by three developments: a call by the Communist Party to armed struggle as the only means to overthrow the dictatorship, a subsequent rash of bombings and terrorist acts throughout the country, and increasing anti-government agita-tion in the misery belts around the nation's capital, Santiago.

This increase of militancy in the working-class suburbs coincided with an almost immediate decline of pot-banging and other demonstra-tions in the middle-class areas. Although there are undoubtedly other reasons for this development, it is clear that the renewed perception of threat, the revived sense of "us versus them," has much to do with the sudden political quiescence of the wealthy sectors of society.

The return to democracy in Chile would require a broad alliance of all sectors of society and the firm com-mitment by all political parties to respect the rules of the democratic game. Only a unified nation can overcome an entrenched dictatorship backed by an obedient military force. To the extent that the struggle short-circuited by class struggle, the political situation is likely to persist. Chile today owes $18.7 billion - or approximately $1,999 per man, woman and child — making it one of the most heavily indebted countries in the world. Unemployment last year reached 30 percent, or about five times the average in the decade preceding the coup. At the end of 1983 the average real wage was 89 percent of what it had been 15 years earlier. About 350,000 Chileans, 10 percent of the labor force, are in emergency minimumemployment programs that pay about $30 per month — one-third the country's minimum wage.

The country is under a state of siege, with a nightly curfew and severe press censorship. Such conditions can not be sustained forever, They have lasted this long because the Pinochet government has suc-cessfully made use of a double terror: that inspired by its own repression, which at times has reached barbaric levels, and that threatened by those who would exchange one form of extremism for another. Until such fears, especially the latter, are overcome, prospects for democracy in Chile continue to be dim.

The writer is a professor of sociology at Johns Holgins University and a visiting research fellow at the University of California, San Diego. He recently visited Chile and contributed for democracy continues to be this to the Los Angeles Times.

Internal Unrest Adds to Warring Iran's Miseries

carry out his policies in the country. No one can say yet how far the opposition has gone. There are reports, however, of riots and strikes in Mashhad, the holy city of Qom and in Tehran. Last month there were several bombings in the capital. As minor and fragmentary as the reports may be, they may presage a drastic change in an already unstable area.

These reports reinforce the fears of many Western military and diplomatic authorities about the next, or postwar, phase in Iran. Their "worst case" projection is that the country will enter a period of civil strife as a result either of the death of Ayatollah Khomeini or of popular opposition to a protracted, costly and militarily fruitless war with Iraq.

That war is now stalemated on the ground. Iraq's attacks on Iranian and other shipping are the only offensive operations. Some experts say that this is the sort of situation that will nourish dissidence within Iran. Estimates of Iranian dead in the ages of spare parts and maintenance personnel. Iraq deploys 580 combat aircraft and 130 armed helicopters. Tehran's only strategy at the moment is one of year desperation. Apparently the a atoliah and his military advisers, a rather amateurish group, believe that the economic strain on Iraq will lead to political uprisings and the ousting of President Saddam Hussein. Although there was minor unrest early last year, Western diplomats in Baghdad see no signs at present that serious opposition to the war will develop. Iraq's strategy is the widely adver-tised but thus far largely ineffective air war against Iranian and other shipping, especially tankers in the Gulf. The most accurate figures available are 75 attacks on merchant ships, 46 of them tankers. A few ships were badly damaged; most have es-caped for repairs in Bahrain. The obvious Iraqi objective was to reduce Iranian oil exports and cut revenues. Up to a point they have succeeded, but there is little evidence suggesting that Iran will be forced out of the war as a result.

A major reason why Iran is able to continue fighting, most Western intelligence experts believe, is the combat inefficiency of the Iraqi air force. Flying French-built Super-Etendards armed with the Exocet missile, and French- and Soviet-made fighter bombers, such as the Mirage F-1 and the MiG-23 and Su-20, Iraqi pilots have registered only limited success.

This is especially true of the Exocets, which had chalked up successes during the Falklands war in 1982. The Exocet has proved less tethal against tankers full of oil or ballast, which above much of the exocet much of the which absorb much of the damage. Kharg Island, an oil terminal built on a coral platform, stands as a mon-ument to the failures of the Iraqi air force. For all their superior aircraft and munitions, the Iraqis have failed to halt oil exports through Kharg. The Iraqi air force may be, in the words of one Indian observer, "too advanced for its own good." A prolongation of the war in a volatile and strategically important region should be a greater cause for concern in the Reagan administration than it seems to be. There is far too much wishful thinking in Washington about the demise of Ayatollah Khomeini and, except for planners at the Pentagon, far too little thought given to the situations that could arise after his death. Similarly, there is a tendency to discount the possibility of an Iranian victory following a collapse of the present government in Baghdad. From the standpoint of moderate Arab states such as Jordan, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, and of Israel, that outcome spells serious trouble.

It would mean, at the very least, the encouragement of fanatic Shiite Moslems in the region and, at the worst, attacks by Iranian-backed Shia groups on moderate governments.

There are no easy options for Iran or Iraq in the present war. Nor is there much that interested third parties can do. The Soviet Union supplies Iraq with 70 percent of its arms. The United States has resumed diplomatic relations with Baghdad and still smarts over the hostages affair. But neither superpower has devel-oped a meaningful diplomatic initiative aimed at ending the war.

The Show Must Go On. In Geneva

By James Reston

Rate of Factorial As Volume

WASHINGTON - There is not which optimism here about next month's U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks in Geneva. It is the city of broken promises and disappointed dreams, but the nations keep going back there in an endless search for a way to make the world more orderly.

They are quite right to do so, for while Geneva was the graveyard of the League of Nations and many other failures, it does not follow that the United States and the Soviet Union cannot reach limited agreements.

For example, they will be meeting on March 12, the 15th anniversary of their treaty commitment to control the spread of nuclear weapons, and on that they have been fairly successful. It was the judgment of most defense experts when the Nonproliteration Treaty was signed in 1970 that by the mid-1980s between 15 and 25 countries would have atomic bombs.

Despite the rapid development of nuclear knowledge around the world, the number of states that say they have nuclear weapons has held at live - the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China, And it is more than 20 years since China tested its first atomic bomb and 10 years since India carried out an atomic experiment, which Pring. Minister Rajiv Gandhi confirmes this week had no military purpose.

This is reassuring, for it suggests that when it is clearly in their common interests, Moscow and Washington can keep their treaty commit-ments. And their reason for doing so in this case was fairly clear.

They might export conventional weapons to other countries or factions, but in a world of powerful pygmies, staggering governments and reckless, bawling religious fanatics, they were careful to avoid putting atomic power in the hands of desper-adoes who might drag the superpowers into unwanted confrontations.

What is not so reassuring, however, is that the superpowers did not keep the other side of the nonproliferation bargain. They did not say to the other nations: You may not have atomic weapons but we may. Trust us! What the United States and the Soviet Union said and signed in the Nonproliferation Treaty was something else. They said that they committed themselves "to achieve at the earliest possible date the cessation of the nuclear arms race ... to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions on nuclear weapons for all time" and "to facilitate the cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons, the liquidation of their nuclear stockpiles, and the elimination from national arsenals of nuclear weapons and the means of their delivery pursuant to a treaty on general and com-plete disarmanient under strict and effective international control."

Well as President Reagan says. that is a big order, but both he and Konstantin Chernenko, wherever he is, have been saying on the way to merely to control or reduce nuclear weapons but to get rid of them.

Most people regard these road signs to Geneva as they regarded Maxim Litvinov's proposal at Geneva in 1932 that there should be total abolition of all weapons by all nations, or Herbert Hoover's suggestion that same year that all existing armaments be reduced by a third.

But leaving all these dreams aside, the fact is that after 15 years of promises by Washington and Moscow that they would stop the spread of nuclear weapons and also stop the arms race between themselves, the governments of the world are beginning to orga-nize and protest that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in Moscow and Washington along with the prohibition of nuclear weapons elsewhere is an outrage that has to be stopped.

The leaders of India, Mexico, Argentina, Sweden, Greece and Tanzania met in New Delhi last week. They approved the Geneva disarmament talks but called for action - no more words - to stop the nuclear arms race, end nuclear testing and ban the development of space-based weapons. And they insisted on their right not only to be heard but to organize the nonnuclear nations to press the demands of a majority of the human race for tangible progress at Geneva — so that the United States and the Soviet Union keep their promises to bring the nuclear menace under control.

The evidence here is that American officials are not listening to the rest of the world, but are merely waiting to see whether the Russians go to Geneva with some reasonable and verifiable compromises. Presumably the Russians, if they can ever get their act and their aging government together, are doing the same. But at least they are going back to Geneva.

LETTER

For Peace in Cambodia Regarding "Non-Communist Cam-bodia Group Gathers Strength Under Son Sann" (Insights, Jan. 16):

Elizabeth Becker's analysis of the situation in Cambodia is an eyeopener. If Nazis could be prosecuted after World War II, it is high time that the UN Commission on Human Rights investigate the alleged Khmer Rouge massacres of two million Cambodians; those found guilty should be brought to book. The belief that "Indochina conmunists are better fighters than non-Communists' is only a myth. That "the United States has all but abdicated its military interest in the Indochina region to China" cannot solve the Cambodian problem. The United States should supply arms to both the nationalists and non-Communist fronts.

Rate of Early Calls Grows As Volume Posts a Record

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS — Lost amid the popping of champagne corks last week as managers congratulated themselves on a record monthly volume of Eurobond issues was another record monthly volume of Eurobond issues was another record—one that managers would prefer to ignore—concerning the number of Eurodollar issues being called prematurely. With February only just begun, there are already 10 issues for which call notices have been sent out, up from an average of four per month registered in mid-1984. The number started rising in the autumn, to eight per month, as dollar interest rates began easing, and the pace is quickening.

amount of $480 million, are floating rates bearing what now look like overgenerous margins of 4-point over the London interbank offered rate, Libor. The remainder, with a face value of some 5300 million, are mostly high-coupon fixed-rate paper sold in 1981 — such as JAL 1548 of 1988 and IBM 124s

There are many reasons to raise dollars in the Eurobond market rather than New York, but surely one of the Market Turnover major motivations has to be the easier technical conditions so often overlooked by investors. These would include payment of interest annually rather than semi-annually as practiced in New York (and as was current in Europe in the early days) and much easier call provisions.

The New York market prefers issues with no early call and accepts such provisions only when a hefty penalty is imposed on the borrower. By contrast, IBM and JAL are paying only a half-percent premium — redeeming paper with a nominal value of $1,000 at a price of $1,005.

All investors holding callable bonds are paying for their careless acceptance of such easy terms: The price on such paper does not rise in step with noncallable bonds as interest rates fall because no one wants to get stuck paying a hefty premium for paper that can be called.

"EANWHILE, the celebrations over January's new-issue volume were cut short by new worries about where the market is headed.

(For the record, data supplied by Salomon Brothers shows that $14.1 billion worth of Eurobonds were launched last month. Dollar bonds remained the dominant component with $6.33 billion of fixed-rate straight bonds, $3.9 billion of floating-rate notes and $120 million of convertibles.)

The undoing of market sentiment was attributable to an unexpectedly large bulge in the U.S. money supply coupled with the Federal Reserve's late-week tolerance in allowing the cost of overnight federal funds to touch 9 percent, from 8½ percent previously. This pushed short-term rates sharply higher and sent a chill through the New York bond market (already upset at the record size — $19 billion — of the Treasury's refunding opera-

Late Friday, Salomon Brothers' economist Henry Kaufman forecast "an end to the recent decline in the funds rate," Reversing his opinion of a week earlier, when he predicted animminent cut in the discount rate, Mr. Kaufman said that Fed funds are likely to trade in the range of 81/2-9 percent this month and added: "The market can no longer take comfort from a seasonal reliquification in the banking system."

More sanguine analysts are still around. They take last week's news of a rise in the jobless rate and drops in both factory orders and the index of leading indicators as signs that the pace of the business expansion is less robust than expected. These observers also stress that U.S. farmers and businessmen cannot afford to lose more foreign markets from a further rise in the value of the dollar that would no doubt accompany a fresh rise in interest

The currency market scoffed at this view and in trading late Friday the dollar soared to 3.193 Deutsche marks, up from 3.1725 DM quoted earlier in Frankfurt and breaking through what had been deemed an important resistance point at 3.18 DM.

The New York bond market also remained depressed, with prices down some 4-point Friday. Fed action supplying reserves to bring the Fed funds rate down to 84 percent was sufficient (Continued on Page 11, Col. 1)

Textile Talks to Resume

U.S., Hong Kong Debate New Rule

United Press International
HONG KONG — Hong Kong's light with the United States over textile-import restrictions reaches a crucial stage Monday, when trade officials open a new round of talks on the dispute in Washington.

Pressure on both sides is high. Hong Kong's knitwear industry claims it will face major unemployment and financial losses if the rules are not amended. The dispute could also affect U.S. relations with China.

The new rules, which took effect Oct. 31, attempt to end a practice known as transshipping. When a textile-making country nears its quota for exports to the United States, it often sends garments to mather exports for first sensible. another country for final assembly and labeling, taking advantage of that nation's unused quotas.

The Reagan administration re-defined the technical term "country of origin" to mean that a gar-ment being sent to the United States was legally from the last country in which "substantial transformation" took place, not only the final steps.

Hong Kong officials claim the rules will disrupt an accepted practice in the garment industry that is used to take advantage of cheap labor and keep corte deep

The Hong Kong government es-timates that more than 70 percent of Hong Kong's sweater exports to the United States are assembled from panels knitted in China, and therefore run afoul of the rules.

Beijing claims that several thou-sand workers producing knitted panels for Hong Kong could be laid off. China has said that overall trade with the United States could

Grim Times for France's Carmakers

Labor Trouble. Mounting Losses Plague Industry

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service
PARIS — For France's embattled automobile industry,

1985 may prove to be the most painful of times. After losing more than $2 billion in the last three years, it now faces the prospect of sharp cuts in its bloated work force, a move that the Socialist government has resisted until now and one that could spark labor unrest. The government's concern is evident. It recently dismissed Bernard Hanon, chairman of Renault, who was unable to stem the tide of red ink at the stateowned company, France's big-gest carmaker. And its choice of a replacement was telling: Georges Besse, who took the beim of Renault late last month, eliminated more than 4,000 jobs when he headed another stateowned company, the Pechiney aluminum concern. Most industry experts believe that the gov-ernment wants him to do a similar iob at Renault.

tember, Mr. Calvet has persuaded the government to allow him to dismiss 1,600 workers and he has said that further cuts are likely. The government of President François Mitterrand has been re-luctant to permit the dismissal of workers, making it virtually impossible for a privately owned company as prominent as Peugeot to fire employees without power surpluses, heavy losses, growing competition from rivals with innovative model lines and a need for fresh capital to strengthen balance sheets and to invest in new plant and equipment. Both companies have been among the slowest on the continent to recognize the growing crisis of overcapacity gripping the entire European market.

Critics charge that part of the plame for the industry's decline lies with France's Socialist government. On coming to power in 1981, it reflated the economy, which led to sharp increases in auto demand. But those economic policies helped crode profit margins for carmakers, who had to operate with higher labor and social security charges and strict price controls. In 1983, when the government was forced to adopt austerity measures, the French car market collapsed.

U.S. Economy Starts Year Well, Survey Shows

NEW YORK - The U.S. econo-

NEW YORK — The U.S. economy began 1985 growing briskly after a downward drift at the end of 1984, the National Association of Purchasing Management said Sunday in its latest monthly survey.

The group, which comprises purchasing executives of 250 major industrial corporations, said new orders were up sharply in January after a months-long negative trend, and that production improved after slipping in December.

Other good signs were that vendor deliveries slowed slightly and employment improved, it said. In addition, inventory levels increased from year-end lows.

percent of the purchasers indicated that overall price increases for the first quarter so far are running lower than originally budgeted, compared to only 5 percent who said they were higher.

"The economy has entered 1985 strongly," said Robert J. Bretz, chairman of the group's business survey committee and director of corporate purchasing at Pitney Bowes Inc. "The danger signals we were seeing during the last quarter seem to have faded."

The association's composite index increased to 52.5 percent in dex increased to 52.5 percent in January from 50.9 percent in December. The index was at 51.4 percent in November, the group said.

U.S. Aide Says Protectionist Mood Is Strong

BRUSSELS — The record 123.3-billion U.S. trade deficit for last year will increase pressure on Congress to adopt pro-tectionist measures that could disrupt trade relations between the United States and the European Community, a senior U.S. official has warned.

The official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, said here Friday that the Reagan administration had a good record on opposition to protectionism. He said 180 bills considered protectionist were filed in 1984 but only two trade measures opposed by the EC were passed.

In 1985, however, "the atmophere is much more conducive" to the adoption of protectionist measures because of the trade deficit, he said. Congress will be under stronger pressure to look for a "shortcut" to reduce the deficit, he said. The U.S. ran a $13.3 billion deficit with the EC last year.

Vendor deliveries slowed some what in January as purchasers reported catching vendors with their inventories down at the end of the year and struggling to meet the increased demand in January.

The rate of employment improved slightly in January, after five consecutive months of decline. Phose reporting same or greater employment rose to 79 percent from 77 percent in December. However, many continued to re-port belt-tightening measures re-sulting in selective layoffs, either current or planned within the next month or two.

Purchasers reported increasing inventories in January after numer ous reductions in December to keep year-end inventory low.

Seventy-two percent reported same or higher inventories, up from 68 in December, the group said.

Short-Term Notes Still In Demand

By Carl Gewinz mal Herald Tributi PARIS - Demand for shortterm Euronotes remains substan-tial, but the bidding is becoming much less aggressive.

This was demonstrated last week when Sweden made its third request for banks to bid for $200 million of three-month notes. Previous drawings under a $4-billion credit facility arranged last year totaled $500 million. On the first drawing, Sweden paid an average margin of 13.56 basis points below the London interbank bid rate. On the second, it paid an average of 11.3 basis points (hundredths of a percentage point) below Libid. And on the latest, the average cost was set at 7.45 basis points below Libid.

SYNDICATED LOANS

Although the terms have become less aggressive — the lowest accept-ed bid last week was 10 basis points below Libid and the highest was 6.26 - demand for the notes far exceeded the supply. Citicorp International, agent for the loan, said it had received bids amounting to $1.11 billion. Overall, however, there appears to be increasing wariness on the part of bankers about the depth of this new Euro commercial paper market. The notes are supposedly aimed at corporate treasurers and other institutional investors who cannot command the bid rate in making bank deposits. But bankers report that these investors are reductant buyers, in part because making bank deposits requires no approval from senior management, whereas participat-ing in such new facilities would. In addition, managing a loan portfo-lio would require back-office sup-port staff. Finally, the tight margins on loans make them less compelling alternatives to classic time deposits with banks.

With classic syndication of loans at a low ebb, the few operations that are mounted have met with good success. Gabon, which sought a $50-million, eight-year credit, re-ceived offers for $110 million. In the end, it increased the total to $60 million. It can draw the funds in dollars or European currency units and will pay a margin of % point over the interbank offered rate for the first three years and 1 point over for the final five years. Frontend fees total up to % percent. Italy's Montedison is in the market for a seven-year loan of 100 million ECU, offering to pay a margin of 1/2 point for the first three Phillips Petroleum is seeking terms for a three-year, $500-million loan. At a special meeting Feb. 22 the company is to ask shareholders to approve a capital restructuring necessitated by the settlement of a takcover battle with Mesa Petroleum. Phillips said that, after the recapitalization, its employees through various means will own 32 to 42 percent of its common stock-Also expected soon is a $500million loan for the Korea Exchange Bank. The South Koreans are looking for an eight-year loan, but want more favorable terms than the Korea Development Bank received late last year (% point over Libor for the first three years and % point over for the final five years).

PSYCHOTHERAPY IN THE THIRD REICH: The Göring Institute

By Geoffrey Cocks. 326 pp. Illustrated, $24,95. Oxford University Press, 200 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016.

Reviewed by John Gross

O many people, the title that Geoffrey L Cocks has chosen for his fascinating study will sound like a paradox. Psychotherapy? In the Third Reich? The venom with which the Nazis attacked Freud and his ideas is notorious. But as Cocks points out, there was nothing in their own ideology (insofar as they had one, apart from racism) that automatically committed them to opposing other forms of psycho-therapy, and while many psychotherapists primarily psychoanalysts — were forced to leave Germany after 1933 to avoid persecution, many others remained behind.

Those who did quickly banded together to form a new national organization, a successor to the General Medical Society for Psychotherapy, which had been founded in the 1920s. They chose as their leader Matthias Göring, a psychotherapist who was a cousin of Hermann Goring, and in 1936 their position was consoli-dated by the establishment in Berlin under Göring's direction of an institute for psychotherapy and psychological research.

Until now, the story of the Göring Institute has been a neglected chapter in the history of the Nazi era. It does not fit in well with standard preconceptions, and understandably enough it has been edged out of the picture by memories of the onslaught on psychoanalysis. But thanks to Cocks, who teaches at Albion College in Michigan, it has at last received the attention it deserves.

In pre-Hitler Germany, the General Medical Society had served as an umbrella organization for all major schools of psychotherapy apart from orthodox Freudians. Many of its members were influenced by the German romantic heritage and its semimystical traditions, and while there is no hard and fast evidence about their politics. Cocks suspects that they may well have been predominantly conservative and nationalist in outlook. Certainly some German psychotherapists believed the Hitler regime would realize their own cultural ideals, and a considerable number, whether for opportunistic reasons or not, joined the Nazza party after 1933.

It is equally true that there were prominent members of the Goring Institute who subscribed to cloudy notions of "volkisch" psychology, and who were given to brooding dark-ly over what they considered to be the inherent evils of democracy and modernity. One such advocate of "unspoiled" pre-democratic values wrote that behind the ideals of liberty, fraternity and equality there would always loom the guillotine — a macabre metaphor in the context, as Cocks points out, since a leading mem-ber of the institute, John Rittmeister, was to be beheaded by guillotine in an S. S. prison after being convicted of working for the resistance.

Yet attempts to establish a new, specifically German form of psychotherapy quickly metted away, and most of what was taught and prac-ticed at the institute was well in line with established schools of thought. Matthias Goring himself was heavily influenced by the doctrines of Alfred Adler, and to a lesser extent by those of Carl Jung, his senior colleagues in-cluded other Adlerians and Jungans, eclectic independents — and even Freudians (though they had to conceal their allegiance and use neutral terminology in public).

One of the things that comes across most clearly in Cocks's book is how deeply Frend's influence had penetrated in Germany by 1933, and how hard it was for any psychotherapist to disown it completely. This made for divided loyalties inside the Göring Institute, symbolized by the fact that in its early years a portrait of Freud hung in the foyer along with a portrait of Hitler. And in trying to serve two masters, psychotherapists went through some strange contortions.

The Göring name and the Göring family connection undoubtedly made an enormous. difference. They gave Matthias Göring a politic cal leverage that psychotherapy would otherwise have lacked, and enabled him to fend off interference from many quarters - from bureaucrats, ambitious troublemakers, fanatics reaucrats, ambitious froublemates, manus-like Julius Streicher, who would have been glad to see medical psychology abolished complete-ly. They also helped him to cope with the traditional opposition that psychotherapists continued to encounter from psychiatrists, some of whom were now powerful figures in Nazi circles. The institute ran a clinic treating patients from all over Germany; it also had separate divisions dealing with specialized areas such as educational counseling and industrial psychol-ogy. But in the long run, Cocks argues, its greatest significance lay in training future therapists and achieving a new institutional status for psychotherapy, which was to be reflected in the growth of the profession in postwar Ger-many (East as well as West).

At the same time it had many contacts with the Nazi authorities, including the S.S.; it undertook research on their behalf - into. homosexuality, for instance - and inevitably became embroiled in the Nazi war effort. Matthias Göring himself was a reserve officer in the Luftwaffe.

It would take a Janet Malcolm to do full justice to some of the more disquieting incidents and personalities in "Psychotherapy in the Third Reich." Cocks does not quite have that degree of narrative flair, but he has nonetheless produced a remarkably interesting book, distinguished by solid research and sound judgment.

Ethiopia and the Touch of the Poet

NEW YORK - Alex English learned about the famine in Ethiopia the way so many other Americans had — after a good dinner. "I was watching the CBS Evening News at home with my wife," recalls the Denver Nugget forward. "It was a sorry situation to the control of the

The next day English phoned Larry Fleischer, the general counsel for the National Basketball Association Players Association. "Alex told me, 'We've got to do something to help those people,' "Fleischer says, "That's how all this started."

At the NBA all-star game Sunday in India-napolis, the thoughtfulness of English will be translated into $100,000 for the Ethiopian victims. Each all-star has agreed to donate his share — $2,500 by each member of the winning team, $1,500 by each of the losing team. In addition to that $48,000, Commissioner David Stern has pledged that the league will add the remainder of the $100,000 contribution to the Interaction Ethiopian Fund. which coordinates food donations from 23 organizations.

But the roots of what English has done can be traced to when he was growing up in Columbia, South Carolina, "I'm sure it goes back to never having a full stomach when I went to bed as a kid," he said.

"It was nothing comparable to what the people in Ethiopia are going through, but I pretty much lived on one meal a day. My brother, my two sisters, and our cousins lived with our grandmother, 13 kids in all. We were poor and there were a lot of mouths to feed." The much touted French settled for a 9-9 draw with England at Twickenham. The Scots, who had swept all four of their matches last year, were outplayed in Edinburgh, 18-15, by the rejuvenated version of an Irish team that had lost all four times last year. While fans watched televised reruns of the match highlights, the glummest among the glum French faces at the formal banquet on the sadge of Hyde Park belonged to Parhick Estève, the ace try-scorer who botched his only scoring chance Saurday. But Esteve was not the only culprit in the French fiasco. And all last week's news of England's death was premature. "No bopers," the Daily Mail had called captain Paul Dodge's men Saturday morning, in a typical example of the media putdown that fired up the inexperienced team. It came out alive and kicking -a drop and two penalty goals by new flyhalf Rob Andrew, a lean 21-year-old in his third year at Cambridge.

Andrew's last points, matching the nine from three drops by French flyhalf Jean-Patrick Lescarbours, came in the last minute of regulation time. Again, as with Esteve's goof late in the first half, France paid for overconfidence and English spunk paid off. French forwards finished exhausted after too much dominant but ultimately sterile shoving in the scrums. England's forwards were still barging up the middle as the clock was running out, led by No. 8 Bob Hesford and flanker David the French conceded a penalty on England's 45.

But "the man of the match, without a doubt," said Greenwood, was scrumbalf Richard Harding an ancient rookie at 31, for hustling to catch Estève when the Frenchman was already over England's line.

Aside from defense - England remains tryless at home in Five Nations play since 1982 — the French backs had a spectacular off day. They fumbled high punts, passed distractedly, miskicked and wandered offside. Only once were they recognizable: center Philippe Sella checking and dashing back to his forwards for a ruck on the right.

Estève, who had soured across from the right wing, took Blanco's instantaneous pass and crossed the line untouched. But instead of putting the ball down he veered infield to get closer to the posts and make the conversion easier. As he took off on an unnecessary dive, shrewd old Harding, like a Spitfire somebow overtaking a Minage, clattered Na down on top and knocked the ball loose before Estève landed.

Here Comes the Boffin

By William Safire WASHINGTON — "You said you were seeking a replacement for the word pundin" writes Godfrey Sperling Jr. of The Christian Science Monitor. How about

I am a language maven and a political pundit. Those two nouns, one of them relatively new to En-glish, have quite different mean-

A maven is a self-proclaimed expert. When someone says "I am a maven," however, a note of selfmockery is added, as if to say "and if I'm not such an expert, sue me." Just as the Yiddishism kibitzer, or "participating onlooker," was adopted by the English-speaking in the last generation, maven has made its way into the dictionaries. In the synonymy of expertise, a slot has been left open: connoisseur connotes a person of exquisitely discriminating taste; expert or authority has a technocratic or academic ring, and aficionado or enthusiast carries a meaning of less discrimiphrase closest in meaning, but with bookish overtones, is opinion lead-

As can be seen, maven is a word I like, but pundit, as a term for "polit-ical commentator," is getting tired. The Hindi word for "learned man" was popularized in the United States by Henry R. Luce, founder of Time magazine, who applied it to Walter Lippmann, the columnist and full-time sage. Further digging in the Oxford English Dictionary shows pundit to have been used in this colloquial, mocking sense as far back as 1816: "For English pundets condescend: / Th' observatory to ascend" was in the poem "The Grand Master" by Quiz, a pseudonym probably for William

What other choices are there? Savant is too precious by far." writes Edward Engberg of Santa Barbara, California, dismissing the term for "knowing one." He prefers a coinage like wisant. Another -ant coinage suggested was sagant, but that sounds too much like sergeant; several writers like pedant, but the teaching profession has that locked

Another response to the query for a word between wise man and wise guy that came in from several readers was polymath, a Greek-based word meaning "a person of

because it conjures a vision of a parrot loudly spouting numbers, which limits its use to economic Chochem has its legion of supporters. "If the French savant is in the running as a replacement for the Sanskrit pundit," writes Miriam Gross of New York, "why not also consider the Yiddish chochem? Depending on how it is used, it can mean 'wise man, clever fellow' or, sarcastically, 'wise guy.' "No; with maven already in the field, the fricative fricassee of chochem is redun-

Another possibility, from the scientific world, is bonze. "Like pundit, the word comes from South Asia, in this case I think, Vietnam," writes Dietrick Thomsen of Science News in Washington. "It refers to a very senior Buddhist monk, the sort who is always propounding the most inscrutable koans."

The most colorful contribution was by Dr. Daniel Hely of Carlisle. Pennsylvania, who found the hairball oracle, a title of a chapter in Mark Twain's "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn." "Miss Wat-son's nigger, Jim," recounts Huck, "had a hair-ball as big as your fist, which had been took out of the which had been took out of the fourth stomach of an ox, and he used to do magic with it. He said there was a spirit inside of it, and it knowed everything."

However, hair-ball oracle is a tad too pretentious. Portmanteau words like savantaleck, wisdomfont and greminence are off the mark. My favorite is boffin.

"For pundit try boffin," suggests David Sider of the department of classical and Oriental languages at Queens College in New York.
"This is a British term of recent coinage that is defined (defining clauses begin with that - right?) by the O. E. D. Supplement as referring primarily to scientists with 'back-room' knowledge, but I've heard it applied to experts in gener-

The lexicographers at Oxford point out that boffin, elymology unknown, was first used by young naval officers about their elders, and later by members of the Royal Air Force about the scientists working on radar.

The Changing Look of the Peace Corps

By William R. Green New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Thumbing through The Greeley Daily Tribune over breakfast recently, Gus Graves read that the Peace Corps was looking for 600 volunteers to provide famine relief in Africa. The article gave a toll-free telephone number. Graves called.

Tve always felt sorry for those little kids I've seen on TV and all," said Graves, 47, a mechanic from Greeley, Colorado. "It just gets to you." He was one of more than 7,200 people who telephoned the Peace Corps after Jan. 10, when the corps' director, Loret Miller Ruppe, asked on U. S.television for volunteers to spend two years in African nations such as Mali, Zaire, Lesotho and Niger.

"It's an unprecedented response to a recruiting drive like this," said Pat Seaman, a Peace Corps spokesman in Washington. She said volunteers were coming from all 50 states: many are older Americans, some of them retired, some with 20 or 30 years of farming experience. Ras Smith, for example, is a 64year-old agricultural specialist who reviews loans made by the Department of Agriculture. He retired once, returned to work and plans to retire again. "I'm quitting for good and I thought this would be an area in which my skills and knowledge might be useful," he said.

John DeRocher, 47, was a farmer and now runs a feed store in Darlington, Wisconsin, population 2,000. He said he felt there was a job to be done in Africa. Whether the corps wants him, he decided, is another matter. "I can remember the Peace Corps recruiting in college and I was sure I didn't want to join then," he said. "I'm not so sure that I'm what they're looking for now."

Actually, DeRocher is precise-ly what the Peace Corps is looking for. It is a very different organization from the one he saw recruiting at the University of Wisconsin more than 20 years ago. The typical volunteer has come to resemble members of the latest group of recruits - older and with experience and skills useful in Third World countries. The average age of volunteers is 28 and a half, against an average of 23 and a half in the 1960s; 350 of the 5,500 members are over 50. More than half the volunteers in the '60s were "unskilled generalists" with bache-lor's degrees in the liberal arts; now only 16 to 18 percent are in that category. The rest are skilled specialists, among them nurses, engineers and people with degrees in agriculture.

Former volunteers and the Peace Corps' founding director, R. Sargent Shriver Jr., speak of the metamorphosis in different terms. Volunteers from the 1960s and 70s often describe themselves as having been idealists, many with naive views of the world and how they could change it. That idealism has not been lost, but it has bowed to an increasing career-mindedness.

"A lot of the career orientation reflects a trend among college students, kids geared to getting a good job and wanting to make money," said Francine Dionne, a volunteer in El Salvador from 1976 to 1978 and now a project administrator for a Washington consulting firm dealing with Third World agriculture.

Many people connected with the corps, however, view the increased pragmatism of volunteers an insignificant part of training," as a healthy development. John Seaman said. Ruppe reinstated it.

adviser to a cocoa cooperative in Cameroon from 1980 to 1982, put it this way: "The people who go into it with a real desire to save the world are not the ones who contribute much, because what you can actually achieve out there is very little.

The people who go with a mixed agenda — who would like to help but also would like to learn a foreign language, see how people live in the Third World, get some distance from their own lives — they are the ones who make the greatest contribution."

The Peace Corps is smaller to-day. It operates on a third of the budget it had in the 1960s and with a third of the volunteers. Shriver and Dionne say Ruppe has allowed the Reagan administration to break with previous administrations' policy and use the corps to further U.S. interests abroad. As a recent example, several former volunteers cited the arrival of Peace Corps volunteers in Grenada two months after the U.S. invasion in October 1983 the corps pulled volunteers out of Grenada in 1982; its government stopped requesting them in 1979). Dionne pointed to the recent decision to increase the numher of volunteers in Guatemala, Costa Rica, Belize and Honduras from about the 550 to more than 1,000 in the next few years.

Peace Corps spokesmen say the move into Grenada was not political. "Shortly after the invasion we had a request from the Grenadan government for teach-Seaman said. "We sent two and later another dozen or so."

As for activities in Latin America, corps administrators say they are complying with the recom-mendation of a bipartisan commission, appointed by President Ronald Reagan and headed by Henry A. Kissinger, to start a "dramatic expansion" of volunteers in the region. Congress has allotted $11 million for the expansion. The volunteers will receive three hours of education on "the menace of Communism," as prescribed by the legislation creating the Peace Corps in 1961. "It has always been in the law, but for a time it lapsed or became PARIS POSTCARD

A Visit to the Texas Town

D ARIS, Texas — Some residents Pof the northeastern Texas town of Paris are disturbed about the movie "Paris, Texas" - which wasn't filmed in Paris, has little to do with Paris, and didn't even premiere there.

"It might as well be titled 'Kokomo, Indiana," said Patrick Ryan, manager of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. "None of it was shot

The 145-minute film includes only one glimpse of Paris - a snapshot of a vacant lot.

"li's about a man who wants to come to Paris, Texas - God only knows what for," said Bill Lamb, editor of the Paris News. "If they used us for the title, they should have filmed some of it here."

The distributor, 20th Century-Fox, rejected plans for a special screening of the movie in Paris, 110 miles (180 kilometers) northeast of

"We thought it was a good idea at first, but it didn't work out," said publicist Ann Cochran. Instead the Texas premiere was held in Houston, Austin and Dallas.

Thomas Steely, 66, fears the movie will tarnish the reputation of the town, which has a population of

"There's no question we'll get lots of exposure — but will it be good or not?" asked Steely, a banker, whose great-grandfather founded the town in 1839.

Portions of the film were shot in Texas, "just about everywhere ex-cept in Paris," said Joel Smith, director of the Texas Film Commission. Locations included Port Arthur, Houston, Nordheim, Terlingua and El Paso, he said. The movie, which won the Golden Palm award for best movie at the 1984 Cannes Film Festival, was made by the West German director Wim Wenders and financed by French investors.

The film's main character, Trav is, turns up wandering in the Texas desert after a mysterious four-year absence. He tries to reunite with his family and dreams of moving to Paris, the town where he believes he was conceived.

At one point, Travis, played by Harry Dean Stanton, holds a snap-shot of a vacant lot in Paris where he wants to build a home. But he never reaches Paris and his quest roots. The movie also stars Nastassja Kinski.

No.

Steely said Paris has escaped the much of the turmoil of modern life. "Our character froze in the 1920s," he said. "It may sound. strange to you, but I like seeing the people I've known for 50 years,"

During the 1930s, Paris was a cotton-farming boomtown and railroad center. The cotton gins stand idle now and the railroads have declined.

Industry is the town's major employer. Campbell's soup and Huggies diapers are made in Paris.

Industrial growth has slowed the exodus of workers that between 1920 and 1960 shrank the town's population from 55,000 to 34,000. And hundreds of soldiers stationed in Paris during World War II stayed when the war ended.

"My husband was a Bostonian," said Mildred Plummer, 78, who married a soldier. "He liked good old Texas. He never had a desire to go back to Yankeeland"

Fire destroyed much of the town in 1897 and 1916. Disaster struck again in 1982 when a tornado killed 11 residents, injured 165 and caused at least $50 million in damage, but the town was rebuilt within a year.
"There's a stickability here,"

Ryan said. "That's the best way I can describe it. People keep on keeping on."

To attract tourists, Paris celebrates Bastille Day, the French in-dependence day, with a festival that includes a quiche supper at the local YMCA. Everybody thinks because our name is Paris, it will look French," said Linda Suarez, a Chamber of Commerce official. "I doesn't."
